Contents Shekasteh-شکسته (Persian for “crossed over”) is a semi-condensed Persian script for writing the Persian language. This script was developed by 10th century Persian scientist/mathematician, alchemist, and philosopher, Al-Biruni (973–1048) who had an interest in the ancient Indian script and who traveled and studied throughout the Middle East. The primary characteristic of this script is the use of the form ن (nâ) and ن (nâ) for both the deep و and the light و and , respectively. The letters in the script are very nearly classical, like the rest of the Persian alphabet. The 27 glyphs of this font are not ordered or numbered, but are simply named and aligned. The license for this font is released under a Creative Commons Attribution 3.0 license. Dima Shekasteh is released as a companion font for the Ming dynasty inspired, printed scroll calligraphy font, Dima Shekasteh Script. Dima Shekasteh is a beautiful and modern version of the ancient, complex Persian language script. Dima Shekasteh contains a single glyph for each letter of the Persian language as read right to left. This original art font was created by computer technology, transforming the red-lettering on a printed document into digital form. Dima Shekasteh includes a character palette for the editing of all non-standard glyphs. This font is a must have for all Persian and calligrapher’s out there.

Dima Shekasteh is designed for Persian and international users. It works well with today's web browsers and is ready to download instantly. Shekasteh, an adaptation of Dima Shekasteh, is a regular modern version of the ancient, complex Iranian alphabet. Dima Shekasteh contains a single glyph for each letter of the Persian language as read right to left. It has been designed for users with limited drawing and layout tools, and will work with any program that supports more traditional fonts. Dima Shekasteh includes a character palette for the editing of all non-standard glyphs. This font is a must have for all Persian and calligrapher’s out there. Shekasteh, another adaptation of Dima Shekasteh, is a regular version of the ancient, complex Iranian alphabet.
