What's New In?

You do not have the required permissions to view the files attached to this post. so maybe this was a good idea and it worked out for a good reason, but I'm just sharing my view and belief on it. I'm not pulling any punches. My view on the idea of investing in 'trading tokens' as a speculation, is that this is just one of a number of reasons why that market is not a viable one for the day to day guy and only for those who manage to accumulate enough, to be of any relevance. Anybody who starts up a 'trading token' exchange will need to be taking a very, very large 'what if' risk, as to whether or not the coins are traded at a price that is of any significant value. Also, they will need to have a huge 'what if' risk as to whether they can attract enough traders to accept the coins, before they have to actually list their own token as an exchange, as the funds will presumably be coming from friends and family and will need to attract these traders to the exchange, as well as the original tokens, as a huge risk. There are other concerns, but I am hoping this is not a good 'get rich quick' scheme. Just more of the same. These "trading" coin are all fraud as they all have the same scammers making them or other scammers take them out to sell them for these coin. "Trading" coin is better known as "forkcoin". The only thing you do is to pay for the space to create your coin, and then you get paid when others sell for the altcoin. The only person who might pay are the altcoin owners for his coins, and thats it. The tokens launched on these exchanges are usually garbage and have no value and the only reason they exist is to get and pump altcoins on the exchange. All they do is take away liquidity from real exchanges. When I see tokens listed on a exchange they will often be a token that doesnt exist at all, not even a whitelisted project, but a regular coin with the team name and a 1:1 wallet address to a wallet with a balance of 1 satoshi. You can see this here for all those "price stable" tokens:
